Black Mountain's Challenging Par-3 Course Opens

European tour pros Pelle Edberg, Alex Noren and Johan Edfors (pictured) at the first hole at the new Black Mountain par-3 course in Hua Hin, Thailand. The new nine-hole golf course at Black Mountain, 200 kilometres south of Bangkok, is already winning plaudits. The European pros raved about the layout when they test-drove (or, more correctly, test-ironed) it. Deep and plentiful bunkering, water on almost every hole, greens protected by steep banks, and undulations everywhere make the course a challenge even for tour pros.

Designer Phil Ryan of Pacific Coast Design in Melbourne, Australia has cleverly used a natural valley, with a meandering stone-walled watercourse running through it to build the nine holes. On either side of the water are holes of 125m to 175m from the back tees, or as little as 85m from the front tee boxes. There will even be a tee on the clubhouse roof for novelty events.
